

*Late that afternoon, Wilbur took a seat on the...wing next to his brother....
It was the only time they would ever fly together, something they had promised their father they would never do. Just this once, ...he had relented.*

Then it was (their father's) turn....he climbed up next to his youngest son for the first time....At one point during the flight, Milton leaned close to his son's ear and shouted above the...roar of engine, propellers, and slipstream,

‘Higher, Orville, Higher!’

Wright biographer Tom Crouch

Father and Son at 395 feet

On May 25, 1910, two brothers brought their 81-year-old father here for a once-in-a-lifetime experience. The Wrights had been flying for six-and-a-half years, and had full confidence in their skills and their flying machines.

Orville Wright

Milton Wright

